Your guide to Lamont...

Level B

- The Media Lab is your one-stop shop for creating videos, music, graphics, and animation. Need to learn to edit video? We have expert media help at the desk until midnight or library close. No footage to edit? We have cameras and other equipment you can borrow to record, import, and export media in a variety of old and new formats.

- The Collaborative Learning Space can be used for group study when not in use for other events. It has a projector, screen, and laptop hookups, as well as a 46-inch plasma display.

- The Harvard Map Collection is America’s oldest, with over half a million maps, rare historic atlases, hundreds of cartographic CD-ROMs, and geographic information systems (GIS) software.

1st Floor

- Ask us at the Main Desk! Get expert research help in the humanities and social sciences, as well as on numeric data, statistics, government documents, and environmental information. You can also get your assigned course reserve readings and borrow a loaner laptop for short-term, on-site use.

- The New Acquisitions Shelf features recent books, CDs, and DVDs.

- Study in our Ginsberg Reading Room. This comfortable environment — with students helping us to design — features soft seating, a combination of carrels, alcoves and tables, network jacks, and a view of the Square.

- Take a library research class in the Larsen Room. It's also available for group study when not scheduled for classes.

- Print documents from the Café computers or create PDFs at the public scanners. Additional printing and scanning stations are available on Level B.

- Have a snack, check your e-mail, meet with friends, and unwind in the Café. Current periodicals and newspapers are also located here.

3rd Floor

- When you need a really quiet place to study, the Donatelli Reading Room is the place to go.

- Take a class on library research or multimedia in Room 310.

- Relax in the Farnsworth Room after a long day of classes or a tough exam. Curl up with a good book from our collection of leisure reading, which features science fiction, travel guides, graphic novels, romance, mysteries, current bestsellers, and more!

- Visit the Woodberry Poetry Room to read, browse, and listen to the work of modern and contemporary poets from around the English-speaking world.

- Many student organizations choose to hold evening meetings in the Forum Room, a large meeting area complete with a range of video capabilities and a high-quality projection system.

Level A

- The Media Collection on Level A includes a large variety of DVDs, from the classics to seasons of popular current TV shows. The audio collection has everything from records to CDs of all music genres. Viewing and listening stations are available right next to the stacks.

- The User Research Center conducts studies such as usability tests and student interviews to improve library services. Studies offer payment or Harvard swag in exchange for your participation. Stop by to join its study pool or sign up at tinyurl.com/haau.

2nd Floor

- Room 220 is available evenings and weekends for group study.

- The 2nd floor has two classrooms in which FAS classes are held.

4th Floor

- The Language Resource Center is a multimedia computer facility supporting many of the more than 80 ancient and modern languages taught at Harvard.

- Two viewing rooms provide large screens for watching TV, video, and software instruction.

- Areas for group and individual computing are equipped with specialized language software, multilingual Web browsing, and editing and proofreading tools in more than 40 languages. Watch international TV or record yourself on a multitrack audio system!
